

Alternaria

Alternaria invades wheat near harvest time. When the wind blows billions of spores are released into the air. Spore storms can carry trillions of mould spores across several hundred miles. Alternaria causes asthma attacks, especially after thunderstorms. Some people are so wheezy and breathless they need hospital care and sometimes artificial ventilation, so called 'thunderstorm asthma'.